Policy of Ad Hoc Economic Intervention

price increase, the new presidential policy of personal intervention in the interest of economic stability appears to have borne its first fruits. A few weeks ago the President sought to counteract an increase in gasoline prices by loosening import restrictions, but his corrective measure was mild and apparently ineffective. In the case of steel, his threat to relax import curbs may well have discouraged the other companies from following Bethlehem's lead, and the resulting competitive pressures forced Betblebem to retreat from its 12.5 percent incresse for plates, structural shapes and so forth to increases figured roughly at 6.8 percent. It is at least a partial victory for the new interventionist policy.

President Nixon has been extremely reluctant to use the prestige and power of his office in this fachion. For nearly two years he held to the belief that inflation could be brought under control by fiscal and monetary policies. The various restraints applied to the economy brought a drop in the country's real Gross National Product in 1970 for the first time in 12 years. Except for the sudden boom in housing, business and industry are still sluggish and unemployment is high, but inflation persists at a somewhat lowered rate. Powerful industries and unions have continued to push prices and wages to unprecedeuted levels. In these circumstances the administration has been virtually forced into a more active role to combat specific examples of inflation when they become highly visible.

.The policy is not designed, of course, to prevent all price increases in steel or any other industry. United States Steel complained the other day that its transportation

With the rollback of Bethlehem Steel's costs have gone up 12 percent, scrap prices 22 percent, fuel and power costs 15 percent, state and local taxes 13 percent and construction costs 11 percent.

Labor costs will doubtless be boosted substantially in the wage negotiations that will begin a few months hence. Environment protection costs are also rising sharply, and profits are down. In these circumstances price flexibility is essential to the soundness of the industry, but that does not justify setting off price missiles which seem to contain inflationary warbeads.

The White House has let it he known that the cabinet committee on economic policy will continue to study price increases, with regular reports from the Council of Economic Advisers. The President has also directed the construction industry collective bargaining commission to come up with recommendations for dealing with the wage-and-price spiral in that industry within 30 days. This is a far cry from the previous assumption that everything would fall into place if WASHINGTON-Your Uncle Sam stupidity; I wish I knew which it psychiatrists of all kinds. In the present twilight period between recession and recovery, however, some restraints seem to be essential and formal controls would doubtless be a serious drag on recovery. The administration may have decided that, for the time being, miscellaneous intervention is the only course open to it. In any event, the application of this policy that is not a policy will have to be watched

Too Much Capacity Aloft

Trans World Airlines recently asked the Civil Aeronautics Board for authority to work out joint agreements with other airlines to reduce excess passenger capacity. A somewhat similar proposal made last August by TWA, American and United ran into objections from both the CAB and the Justice Department.

There can be no doubt that TWA and most other airlines are suffering economically. In the last four years there has been a steady erosion of their earnings. In the peak year of 1967 the 12 major carriers together earned $412 million. Their profits slipped to $262 million in 1968 and to $147 million in 1969. Last year the 12 major airlines moved into the red, with collective losses totaling $123 million. The cumulative downslide in earnings has been more than a half-billion dollars in four years.

One of the critical elements in this skid, which could yet breed a new Penn Central debacle, is excess capacity. This problem stems basically from the way the CAB sets air fares without adequately segregating rates on high-density routes from those on low-density routes. Monopoly pricing has, therefore, meant that high profits could be earned on the high-density routes. Drawn by those high profits, the airlines-including not only the major trunk carriers but also smaller regional airlines-pressed hard for access to just those routes. The CAB was highly permissive in letting in more carriers, apparently thinking that high profits would continue no matter how many airlines it allowed to enter high-density routes. Back in 1951, the average load factor

(percentage of occupied seats) of the domestic trunklines was 69.6 percent. In 1970 the figure had dropped to 48.8 percent. The recession certainly aggravated the emptyseat problem, but so has the coming of the wide-bodied B-747s. It may be intensified as the industry takes more deliveries not only of 747s but of DC-10s and L-1011s.

The airlines thus see themselves hit with a capacity problem that is unlikely to evaporate with the recession. They are therefore proposing a twofold scheme that would involve (a) agreements to reduce capacity on competitive rontes where loadfactors are unduly depressed and (b) agreements to restrain future capacity additions on competitive routes.

There are reasons for concern over the ultimate impact of reduced competition on largest city. In fact Lagus is not a subtract of the mainland.

Lagus is uct a dreamy suburbs of the mainland.

Nally denomics the killing of 40airline fares or service. And from a public interest standpoint, there are also reasons for concern over the abandonment of unprofitable, low-density runs that perform an essential service for persons and businesses in smaller cities and towns.

The public would derive advantages, however, from a planned reduction in capacity If it resulted in less airport congestion, noise and air pollution. The CAB might well grant experimental permits to airlines to enter into agreements lasting up to one year to reduce excess capacity. Such agreements will need careful policing to insure that public interests are served, not hurt, by them. Regulations should seek to bring about the necessary reductions without the short-term operating and financial chaos that market forces would otherwise dictate.

Trouble in 'Paradise'

Manuel Luis Quezon, the Filipino nationalist, once remarked: "I prefer a government run like hell by Filipinos to a government run like heaven by Americans."

The Philippines was never a paradise under American rule, although some Americans liked to think so, but more than two decades after achieving independence the Filipinos appear to be close to Mr. Quezon's unhappy alternative. Petty quarreling among members of the privileged elite who still dominate Philippine politics threatens to paralyze a government that is already dangerously behind in its promises to wipe out lawlessness and corruption and to narrow the explosive gap between rich and poor in the island republic of nearly 40,000,000 inhab-Itanta.

The drivers' strike that precipitated a hitter break between President Ferdinand E. Marcos and Vice-President Fernando Lopez has been temporarily halted. But the strike was only a superficial symptom of the deeper grievances that are stirring impoverished city workers and rural peasants to increasing rebellion against a system that is heavily loaded in favor of a small, rich minority. The apparent attempt by the powerful Lopez family to utilize the drivers' protest against a fuel price rise to promote their own business interests at the expense of the Marcos government suggests a dangerous indifference to the deeper threat to the government structure on which their own fortunes rely.

Unless the present ruling elite pulls together to give the Philippines the sweeping reforms that President Marcos has repeatedly promised during more than five years in office, the whole structure of post-independence government is likely to crumble. Filipinos can't be expected to tolerate mismanagement in Manila indefinitely, even if the devils are home-grown.

For the Ladies And Gentlemen

By Eugenia Sheppard

ROME, Jan. 20.-Mila Schon has been dressing the ladies with a capital L for a long time. The Milan designer's customer list reads like the Hall of Fame the International Best Dressed List. Now she is reaching for the gentlemen with a capital G. too. Her first fashions for men came as a surprise when they appeared on the runway of the Grand Hotel along with the women's. "I think men should have a chance at the same comfort and luxury women enjoy," Mila said after the show. The eight outlits are made of the same fabrics and colors as the women's and have the same incredible amount of handmade details. For daytime, catmes! rib-knit sweater jackets are outlined in catmeal wool, and are worn with matching slacks and silk shirts. All the jackets are unlined and weigh almost nothing. The evening suits are black or white linen or raw silk with silk or Irish handkerchief linen shirts.

Mrs. Schon has even invented a new kind of necktie, a slip-through print scarf that looks like first cousin to a tie but much softer. The whole group is actually just a trial balloon and none of the duplicates will be available before April.

For the ladies, too, Mila. Schon'e fashions are much softer. Never at their best on a runway, they are more than ever at a disadvantage this time. The inserts of rib knitting, tucking, smocking, hand rolled edges and Mrs. Schoo's famous little jewel-like buttons of gold and ename!, all the things that cost a fortune, can only be appreciated close up.

One dress alone took two girls ten days to make. It's a pullover and skirt of ecru colored linen with long stripes of hand-drawn work on both. It looks like the Thirties and she shows it with a Thirties cloche hat. One of Mila Schon's inventions in the collection is the pullover dress without a trace of a button or zipper. There are ten of them, made of black featherweight georgette printed in art nouveau designs. They are all unlined and decorated with baby dress smocking at throat, wrists or all through the body. The great daytime color is catmeal. Coats, pullovers and dresses are made of donble face wool inset with rib for rainy days.

She shows more pants than most designers this season, some of them gathered like a paratrooper's at the anties. For evening she does the paratrooper look in silk with smock-ing instead of elastic at the ankles. No hot pants for Mila, but she likes Bermudas. Ecru. linen suits are sweetened with lacy blouses.

Mila Schon, whose style used to be described as hard edge, even goes so far as to provide four long lingerie dresses, handembroidered, lace-encrusted and complete with baby bonnets.

Her half-dozen evening dresses are wispy black georgette, hand beaded in Persian rug colors and patterns.

The beads aren't ostentatious but used only for medallions, belts or bands around the hem. Mile Schon will open a bou-tique on the Via Condotti here within the next few weeks, and it follows that New York, where she has so many customers, will be the next stop.

Fabiani has the usual nice coats, but the only new things in his collection are the cotton and the abstract evening dresses. The evening cottons are in dark colors and country calico patterns made into long dresses with long sleeves, flounces, ruffles and a few sequins to prove it's all in fun. The abstract crepe evening dresses are taken from Fabiani's one painting, like the color streak of lightning that not only hangs on his salon wall but is reproduced on a white crepe sheath. Gucci is off on an all-one-color kick, and the color it specially likes for spring is a kind of dusty old

Typical is a flaring midi-length skirt of dusty rose suede, with port holes cut out below the waistline. It is worn with a paler silk shirt, dusty rose all over in the GGs that Gucci prints on luggege and fabrics. They come in all the sbop's favorite leather colors like rose deep green, blue and several shades of beige. Not yet available, they will cost around $4.50 when they are ready in spring. One of the best new Gucci looks is the tunic of blond suede over hot pants to match, completely washable. To metch, barefcot sandals come in the same color.

Gucai shows sporty suede dresses with brass buttons but square necklines and wide straps over bare shoulders. Por the first time the shop goes into even more female fashions, using crepe and linen with its printed GG jersey

Crisis Behind the Scenes At Italian Collections By Hebe Dorsey ROME, Jan. 20,—Couture, admittedly, is no longer what it used to be, but the situation in Rome is just short of catastrophic. For one thing, the number of American buyers, not to mention manufacturers, has dwindled sharply. Only ten years ago, in the golden days when America copied Euro-pean couture, at least 100 manufacturers attended the showings. Today, you'd be lucky to count a dozen, if that,

It is reported that 80 percent of the Roman couture houses are undergoing a severe crisis, although many won't admit it. Their troubles come from a combination of steep increases in the price of fabric (because of strikes in the mills) and equally staggering salary raises. "Since I opened my house seven years ego," Tiziani said, "salaries have more than doubled."

Smaller Shows

As a result, the couture houses are showing smaller collections and some are not showing at all. De Barentzen and Forquet bave a few models available to their private clientele but are not holding the usual big press collections. Forquet said yester-day that times have chenged and he doesn't find it necessary to show more than once

To cast another shadow on the Italian conture, its star, Valentino, who was ecquired last year by Kenton Corp. of New York, has established headquarters in Amsterdam, no doubt for tax reasons. The establishment is still in Rome, but still something is missing.

As you arrive at the openings, you note the lack of the usual bustle ond pushing crowds; the atmosphere this year is about as exciting as flet

At higher economic levels, the fashion industry, as a whole, is second in the Italian export trade, During the first months of 1970, exports fell by 8 percent while imports went up by 37 percent (compared to 1969). This is a difficult, dangerous The fabric manufacturers are the first ones to admit that couture is in a bad way. Giam-paolo Porlezza, who has supplied his Taroni fabrics to both French end Italian couture for 20 years, said his business has dropped by 30 percent. In order to recoup his losses, he is investing in real estate. "Nobody in his right senses makes couture fabrics any more." he said.

Vittorio Azzario (Nattier fabrics) recently sold out to a car company. He's already devoted part of his production to making home furnishings fabrics and car upholstery materials.

It is also strongly rumored that the large synthetic groups who used to help the ailing couture with free fabric and publicity pages are feeling that this is not worthwhile any more and that they will withdraw their support as of next season.

Ready-to-Wear

All is not lost however for the fashion industry. For one thing, the strongest couture houses will survive, no matter what. But the interest now is focusing on ready-to-wear. The earlier the Italian couturiers develop their ready-to-wear, the better off they'll be. Although they are not yet as organized as the French couture houses, many are beginning to see the

The strongest and most reas-suring direction comes from Saks Fifth Avenue, which has sent a brigade of buyers to Eu-rope, led by its president, Gor-don Franklin. Saks had dropped all business with Europe for years because they didn't feel that countre copies were the answer any more. But they are now engaged in a large-scale campaign to buy European ready-to-wear.

Saks, with 29 stores, bas the largest buying power in the United States and maybe the world, in high-quality merchan-

"We have decided to take a bigger position on European ready-to-wear," Mr. Franklin said yesterday, "to add excite-ment and a different point of view to our stores. This," he edded, "is an exploratory trip. We'll come back for the readyto-wear openings (in April) but we have to look at couture because one relates to the other.
The practically the first and ordy European ready-to-wear campaign we ever did," Mr. Franklin said. "But after all, Europe didn't have a lively ready-to-wear until recently." Se couture may be dead economically but long live ready-to

Celebrating the Birth of the Persian Empire

By Naomi Barry

PARIS, Jan. 20.—This is the Year of Cyrus the Great.

The year 1971 marks the 2500th anniversary of the founding of the Persian Empire, and all Iran will be celebrating during the month of October. However, advance festivities are taking place right now in Paris at the Meison de lTran, which has made the Champe-Elysées a gateway to the Orient.

The Maison de l'Iran is a intriguing conglomeration of cultural activities, bassar, and the very best, large-grained pearl-gray caviar. Directing this lively hospitable house is His Excellency Webdi Boushehri, brother-in-law of the shah, Aid-the French-born wife Greek composer. The two first met in 1967 at the Festival of Contemporary Music in Persepolis Green "I like the way you take care of the affairs of your hasband," said Mr. Boushehrl. "You must come and halp me.

Basic Function

The basic function of the maison is to promote a knowledge of the arts, history, literature, artisanship and industry of the present day country which grew out of Cyrus's empire. The bazzar aspects help to pay the bills.

As the send-off for this jubilse year, the Maison de l'Iran is presenting, until Jan. 31. a rare collection of 18th and 18th century court paintings recently acquired by the Empress Fareb

The paintings peregrinated around the Middle East, across Europe and ended up mainly in the hands of private English collectors. Their return to Iran promises to be one of the highlights of the anniversary year.

In the past two years since its inception, Mr. Boushehri and Mrs. Xenakis have kept the Maison de l'Iran humming. Percussionists from the Paris Opera. heve been invited to improvise with Iranian musicians while the public lolled around luxuriously on Persian carpets. France-Inter has had musical broadcasts from the locale.

FLORENCE Jan. 20.—The Florentine audience is usually staid, even apathetic at times, but at this season's first performance of "Ia Traviata" last night at the Teatro Comunale, there were demonstrations and counter-demonstrations worthy of a football stadium. There was a nervous atmosphere from the beginning, both on stage and in the house. The star, soprano Renata Scotto, recently published a singular in-terview, in which she made e number of catty remarks about Maria Callas (and Callas Still has plenty of fans around, ready to boo). The tenor who was to have sung Alfredo fell ill at

New Plans Set For Austrian Drama

VIENNA, Jan. 20 (AP),-Plans for Austrian state theaters to be run by an independent economic unit were disclosed by Austrian Education Minister Leopold Gratz at a news conference yesterday.

He said plans worked out by his ministry will go to parliament this spring and that he thought all political parties were interested in bringing a reform to the theaters. The independent economic unit was to be headed by three directors of the state theaters and two other officials. It was to work out its budgetary concept and plans without red tape otherwise involved.

Applause, Catealls

At the end of the first act, there was applause, but there were also shushings and whistles. At the end of the second act. Miss Scotto did not eppear for curtain calls. By this time there was a strong current of hostility against the conductor. the young Israeli Eliahu Inbal, and when he stepped into the pit to begin the famous prelude Act Four, he was roundly hissed. Then came a salvo of applause. More catcalls. Orchestre and conductor abandoned the pit, which then led the audience to applaud loudly, to hure them back. They returned, the opers reached its conclusion. and there was the usual rush for the exits. Under these circumstances, it is difficult to make an objective assessment of the musical aspects of the evening. One thing was clear: Miss Scotto has her ideas of how Violetta should be sung, and they are not the same as Maestro Inbal's views. As a result, singers and orchestra were frequently not together. Inbal alternated rapid, Toscaninian tempi-which were not respected on the stage-with dragging passages where the other artists got ahead of him.

Rigid Rhythm

In both cases, his rhythms were rigid, lacking any sup-pleness or feeling of song. Similarly, he kept most of the opera at safe mezzo forte, so there were none of the shifting levels of sound that this subtle, shimmering work demands.

it was not always good. Her soft singing was often insudible, and some of her notes were spun out so fine that they shredded. The sets and costumes of Thierry Bosquet, created some years ago for the Théâtre de la Monnaie in Brussels, have worn well. So has the staging of Sandro Sequi, except for a few troublesome details (the popping of champagne corks was an unnecessary and unconvincing realistic touch)

FREDERICK THE GREAT

By Nancy Mitford. Illustrated, Harper & Row. 304 pp. $. Reviewed by Richard Freedman

IN APRIL 1945, the Russian Army was pouring into the outskirts of Berlin while Hitler at hunkered in his bunker listening to Dr. Goebbels's no doubt eloquent reading of Carlyle's monstrous "History of Frederick the Great." The Fuhrer, we are told, took comfort in the analagous position Frederick had been in during the Seven Years' War, when things were going so badly for Prussia that he threatened to take poison. As by a miracle, however, Tsarina Elizabeth of Russia suddenly died, and the allies crumbled.

Encouraged by his court astrologers, Hitler decided that a similar event would pull him out of the fire, and sure enough Roosevelt promptly died. But this time the allies didn't collapse. Perhaps the last lesson Hitler learned was the danger of drawing glib parallels from history.

Although he was indeed a great and courage-ous soldier, his true greatness lay in his hatred of war, which he tried to avoid whenever pos-sible, on the wise theory that wars seldom end when you want them to.

He considered that "mixed races produced intelligent people," and did everything in his considerable power to "mongrelize" through immigration a depopulated Prussia after the Seven Years' War. He befriended Voltaire and the philo-sophes, was "fanatical on the subject of freedom of expression," abolished the torturing of prisoners and practically abolished capital punishment altogether, and was generally such a bleeding heart that he never used spurs while horseback rid-"Try sticking a fork into ing:

ligence and sensibility manag-ed to transform Prussia from a congeries of woebegone little states into a power henceforth to be reckoned with is the fascinating story Miss Mitford has to tell in a book as elegant as the music room at Sans Souci. In the same lavish format as her earlier studies of Louis XIV and Madame de Pompadour, "Frederick the Great" is the ideal book for people who want to know some-thing about Frederick, but not too much (Carlyle runs to eight volumes of turgid Ultimate

If New York Buchwald solves its problems through gambling, every state in the union is going to follow suit except Nevada. which will probably secede from the nation in a snit.

Even the federal government may decide that legalized gambling is the only answer to ils deficit, and it's possible in the oear future that placing a bet will soon be considered the most patriotic thing an American can do.

It is not unlikely that in a few years the President of the United States will give the following "State of the Union"

"My Fellow Americans, I am happy to report to you tonight that for the first time in modern Aoierican history the United States has a surplus of 35 billion dollars in the Treasury.

Hailed in France at the start of his career as 'the new Cary Grant,' he turned out not to be. But he is his generation's most polished screen comedian.

Brialy's 15th Anniversary as an Actor

PARIS-The tempestuous story of Rim- France at the start of his career as "the baud and Verlaine, the Max and Moritz of French poesy, is now being filmed by the Italian director-poet Nelo Risi with the English actor Terence Stamp as Rimbaud and French actor Jean-Claude Brialy as Verlaine. The film is called "Une Saison en Enfer" (A Season in Helli, after Rimbaud'e title for the last poems he wro a, at the age of 19.

Locations have included the pretty town of Senlis outside Paris, which is standing in for Rimbaud's dreary birthplace, Charleville: Paris, which is standing io for Londoo: and Rome for the interior shots. The company is now in Ethiopia, where Rimbaud spent his last years of hell as a merchant, sun runner and slave trader, returning to France to die at the age of 37 in 1851,

Jean-Claude Brialy, left behind in the careful luxe of his Marais apartment, since Verlaine never went to Ethionia. believes that the film will throw new light oo Verlaine. "He was a great poet, e eryone knows that, who led a scandalous life, and everyone knows that. What people don't know is that when he met Rimbaud he was only 27."

Brialy, 35, says Verlaine was short and stocky, balding, with a red beard, Brisly, who has dyed his dark hair and beard ginger, says, "Physically, Verlaine was oothing like me. Brialy is known for his rather formal elegance—"It's my style," he says. "If I wore a cap and sweater like Belmondo, I'd look ridiculous."

Familiar as he is to foreign audiences, Jean-Claude Brisly bad neither the charisma of the young Belmondo nor the beauty of the young Delon to make him internationally remarkable. Hailed in new Cary Grant," he turned out not to But he is his generation's most polished screen comedian, and has made 40 films in 15 years, turning in an espe-cially fine performance in his latest film, Eric Rohmer's subtle moral tale, "Le Genou de Claire."

"I am delighted to celebrate my 15th jubilee as an actor with two good films -Glaire and 'Uoe Saison eo Enfer,' "

Mary Blume

he says. He feels that with age his range will broaden. In the meantime a fair amount of dreary commercial films and a highly publicized worldliness have left the public indifferent and the film buffs disappointed:

"We were interested in Brialy in the early Chabrol films," one of the younger critics says, "but now he's just someone who owns a restaurant and knows every-

Acknowledging the fact he has made many commercial films, Brialy sensibly notes, "An actor who doesn't work 's unemployed. If he's unemployed, he's suspect. You can't place a career, it's full of imponderables. When a film does well, they credit the director. When it's a flop they blame the star.

"When I meet people like Fellini, Viscooti and Losey, I tell them I would work for them for oothing," Brialy added.
"They oever ask me to."

The soo of a French colonel he was seot to military school, which be detested, and did his military service in the army's newsreel section. Philippe de Brocca, now a well-known director, was an army pal. Green as could be. Brialy came to Paris at the age of 20, knowing only the Gare Montparoasse, the Gare de l'Est and De Brocca.

"Right after I arrived, we went down to Arles to see a production of 'Julius Caesar' staged by Jean Renoir." Brialy said. "We drove down in a big American car. In it were Chabrol, Godard and Alain Cavallier. In Arles I met Truffaut and Renoir, and later Alain Resnais, Rohmer and Pierre Kast.

"I was closest to Truffant, who had not only great intelligence but also a lot of heart. Chabrol was brilliant and caustic, doing exercices de style. For me the great talent was Truffaut and the genius was Godard-he was the Rimbaud of the cinema. He was even ahead of the nouvelle vague."

It was Truffaut who predicted that Brialy would become the new Cary Grant, but the nouvelle vague wasn't making Cary Grant pictures. Instead. Brialy played in Chabrol's historic first films, "Le Beau Serge" and "Les Cousins." The next year, 1961, he was in Godard's "Une Femme Est une Femme."

Mindful of the catastrophic American films of Jeanne Moreau and Alaio Delon, Jean-Claude Brialy bas no plans to work for Hollywood, though he says, "If Cukor or Wilder asked me to do anything, I would fall on my knees."

He has made only one trip to Hollywood, as a tourist. He did not see Cary Grant, but "I visited le Boulevard du Crépuscule (Sunset Boulevard) and monument with the footprints. And I left a booquet at the grave of Marilyn Monroe. You may find this sentimental, but she was the one I loved most."

From the For Side

The above picture, like an amoeba's great-granddaughter, is a reproduction of a reproduc-tion of a reproduction, a Steinian procedure necessary to preserve the purity of intent of the author of the below letter:

"A friend of mine once said, It is a good feeling to be the world's best at something, even if it isn't something great," writes John Dwyer, of Wuppertal, West Germany. "I am the world's best drawer of mous-taches on printed photographs. The true moustache artist takes account of his sobject's personality as well as his facial structure and expression. Restraint, simplicity of execution and adherence to traditional moustache form are distinguish. ing marks of the true craftsman, as opposed to the mere vandal, but the single fixed rule is: use only a ball-point pen. Enclosed is a sample of my work. Would anyone care to contest my claim to supremacy?"
